

Kathryn Beiser is vice president of global communications for Eli Lilly. In this role, she provides leadership, management and oversight of communications strategy, policy and performance for communications activities across the organization and has oversight of public relations, media relations, issues management, public affairs, internal communications and executive communications.

Kathy has worked across a broad range of global industries during her nearly 30-year career, including healthcare, financial services, professional services and consumer products. Most recently, Beiser served as Chief Communications Officer of Kaiser Permanente. She also served as global chair of the corporate practice at Edelman, executive vice president of corporate communications for Hilton Worldwide and head of communications for Discover Financial Services. Her experience also includes nearly 20 years with some of the world's leading public relations firms, where she specialized in highly regulated industries such as health care and financial services.

Kathy serves on the board of Bright Pink, a nonprofit dedicated to helping women understand and manage their risk for developing breast and ovarian cancer and a member of the Page Society. She holds a bachelor's degree in political science from Northwestern University and a master's degree from the Medill School of Journalism at Northwestern.